

CREATIVITY IN ADVERTISING 2008

Thursday 27th March 2008

Message from the conference chairman

"In recent years – and you can't blame them for it – people have come to conflate creativity with innovation. There are, quite rightly, a million conferences in which people excite themselves over all the wonderful new ways you can reach people nowadays (and I've spoken at most of them). Yet it is one thing to reach people and quite another to "reach" people.

All this media excitement is meaningless if it does not sit alongside a thorough understanding of what hasn't changed – the things that, for ten thousand years, have reliably moved people, and caused them to think, feel and act.

The real creative challenge today lies in the gap between "What if" and "Why should I?" That's what we'll be exploring on March 27th".

Rory Sutherland, Vice Chairman, Ogilvy Group UK, London

CONFERENCE CHAIRMEN

RORY SUTHERLAND, VICE CHAIRMAN, OGILVY GROUP UK, LONDON

Rory joined OgilvyOne as a graduate trainee. After six months training, and thirteen months spent as the world's worst account man (in a last remedial effort he was booked on a time management course, but got the date wrong) he was moved to the Planning Department. Soon afterwards he confessed an interest in copywriting to his line manager, who agreed this was a jolly sensible move. So sensible, in fact, that he fired him. Two weeks after leaving Planning, Rory joined the creative department as a junior copywriter. In 2005 Rory was made vice-Chairman of the Ogilvy Group in the UK in recognition of his improved timekeeping. He remains an advocate of advertising which does different things, rather than just saying things differently.

JESS GREENWOOD, DEPUTY EDITOR, CONTAGIOUS MAGAZINE

Jess spent a stint teaching music in France and Italy before returning to London to work as a music producer. A career change landed her in the advertising industry as Editor of The Reel before helping to launch the award-winning Contagious in December 2005. Jess is currently Contagious' Deputy Editor, covering innovative, effective and non-invasive strategies and campaigns in marketing, branding, design, technology and pop culture. She is a regular speaker at marketing conferences, and has helped to build the Contagious consultancy, offering advice and insight to a number of clients from both agencies and advertisers.
